It seems we're in for a cycle of films on famous painters. Mel Ferrer is playing Modigliani, Metro is readying "The Van Gogh Story" for Kirk Douglas, and Marlon Brando is wanted for the role of Goya by Italian Director Alberta Lattuada with Ava Gardner for Goy's girl friend, the Duchess of Alba.

HOPES FOR BETTER YEAR FOR VA. QUAIL

If Virginia weather continues along its historic course, there is little danger that there will be a repition of three years of excessive drought in a row. Such droughts as occurred in 1952, 1953 and 1954 have never before been found in the records of the Weather Bureau.

Quail hunters, as well as farmers have reason to be concerned when the rains fail to come. In the process of incubating quail eggs at the game farms it is found necessary to keep the humidity in the incubators at a high point, and for a very good reason.

Little quail do not break the eggs wide open and come out at hatching time as so many species of birds do. They systematically peck a ring from the inside around the large end of the egg. When a complete circle has been made, they push open the end of the egg and walk out. If the shells at hatching time are so hard that they cannot make their way out, they die in the shell.

Comment on SPORTS

By Pete Fritchie

Washington, June 8.- The futility of trying to operate a Major League baseball club, with outworn methods is now being seen in Washington. Venerable Clark Griffith, like Connie Mack before him, is watching the times pass him by.

The people who lose out are Washington baseball fans, and theer are plenty of them. If Washington were to ever again get into the pennant fight, even Clark Griffith would be amazed to see the turnout. For the national capitol is growing by leaps and bounds and has been for years.

There is no other Major League team in the capitol and the Nats are free to draw on this larger and larger population each year, almost undisturbed. Yet it has been a decade since the Washington Club came even close to getting into a pennant fight and more than two since Washington won a pennant.

By the time you read this Griffith may have parted with one or two (or more) of his brightest stars, in an effort to get a quantity of young talent which might give him a decent team a few years from now. That has been the story in the national capitol for too long.

The best players would be traded at their peak to get recruits for succeeding years. Early Wynn went to Cleveland. Irv Noren went to New York. And so the story went. The big stars traded away often helped other teams, which had other top stars win pennants. But the flock of youngsters received by the Nats seldom won anything.

Charlie Dressen came into town as the new manager at Washington this year. He hustled and huffed and puffed and he had the Nats racing around. They were eager, alert and ready for a scrap. But the old talent just wasn't there and as a result even energetic Charlie couldn't get the Nats out of the doldrums.

They haven't done as badly as several other teams, but they are still the same old Nats. They probably will continue to be until the Nats, by new methods, build up a better farm system, spend more money for players, and generally get with it, modern style.

SPECIAL PRODUCTION COURSE OFFERED

Williamsburg, Va.- The College of William and Mary will provide a training ground this summer for Virginia communities which plan theatrical productions in connection with the 1957 Jamestown celebration.

A "workshop in theatre arts" will be offered for the first time in the College's summer session.

"Almost every school, community and church in the state is planning special programs and festivals for the 1957 celebration," said Dr. Kenneth Cleetin, director of William and Mary's summer session.

"Many of the festivals of music, pageantry, plays, and dance will be the projects of laymen," he explained, "and they will need to know how to correlate the various arts of the theatre. This workshop is designed to provide them with the know-how."

The workshop is scheduled to open on Tuesday, June 21, and students can register for three, six, or nine weeks. No prerequisites are required for the course.

"Only well-trained members of a community can insure a suitable and satisfactory participation of audience and performers," Dr. Cleeton continued. "We feel that William and Mary will be providing a real service for the Festival by offering the proper training."

The desire for the well-being of one's own nation can be—and must be—made compatible with the welfare of all humanity. —Louis L. Snyder.
